On the Edge

The Eastern Sierra is a land of wonderful contrasts. The sheer rise of the Sierra Nevada creates a sharp edge two miles above the basins below. This region is home to both the lowest and highest points in the contiguous United States — only eighty miles separate Death Valley from Mt. Whitney. The Sierra crest catches moisture-laden clouds from the Pacific Ocean, casting a rain-shadow on the land below. This creates sharp contrasts between the mountains and deserts, and shapes the ecology of a rich variety of animals and plants. These dramatic contrasts have also shaped the culture and character of generations of people who have experienced the Eastern Sierra's edge.

While traveling along Highway 395, look for the Scenic Byway symbol which identifies scenic turnouts and interpretive displays.

We invite you to explore and discover the beauty of the Eastern Sierra. Please help care for this area by taking only pictures and leaving only footprints.
